

Amy Beth Cheney

Executive Advisory

For accomplished executives and senior professionals navigating complex organizational challenges and defining what's next.

Success Brings Different Challenges:

The most challenging decisions often come after you've achieved success.

You may be navigating organizational change, managing difficult stakeholders, shifting career priorities, or questioning what you want from the next chapter of your career. These require space to think, challenge assumptions, and gain an objective perspective.

I help accomplished executives think strategically, navigate organizational complexity, and make confident decisions about what's next.

Areas We Might Explore

- Navigating organizational complexity and changing cultures
- Serving as an objective thought partner for difficult decisions
- Leading through organizational change
- Team dynamics and performance challenges
- Burnout, fulfillment, and long-term sustainability
- Defining what you want from your next chapter

About Amy Beth Cheney

Amy Beth Cheney brings 25 years of sales and leadership experience, including executive roles at Bloomberg and Dataminr. Throughout her career, she led high-performing teams, coached senior leaders, and navigated the strategic, organizational, and people challenges that come with executive leadership.

Today, Amy combines her executive leadership experience with professional coaching to serve as a trusted advisor to accomplished executives and senior professionals. She provides an objective perspective as clients think through complex organizational dynamics, leadership challenges, and important decisions about what's next.

Amy holds an MBA from Cornell University, is a Certified Professional Coach (iPEC), and serves as a Visiting Lecturer at Cornell University's Johnson School of Management and Cornell Tech. She lives in New York City with her husband and two kids.